project guidelines

Whenever one tries to picture a given market, even with the use of 'keep it simple' maps with just service networks on them, there's always a need for some necessary simplifications. Below is a list of basic justifications to what we have included in this publication as well as why:

1. All traffic within European waters

The Atlas lists all ro-pax and ro-ro services that interlink ports within the seas surrounding Europe and surrounded by Europe. This means that regular lines to harbours in non-European coasts of the Mediterranean region are also included, whilst destinations in Africa and Asia are listed only because they are on a service's way from at least one European port. However, we have excluded connections to the Atlantic coasts of Africa and the Atlantic Ocean islands outside the geographical boundaries of Europe (like in the case of the Canary Islands).

2. Only regular ro-pax and ro-ro services

The maps and charts solely cover open access services, which can be treated as extensions of public highways and bridges, therefore dedicated industrial shipping lines as well as pure passenger services aren't included. Moreover, the Atlas' census marks strictly regular services regardless of their frequency (be it daily, weekly or any 'x-minutes' or 'x-days' timetables). In addition, only routes active on the market as in winter 2016/17 have been drawn with their routings valid for that particular moment, except seasonal lines usually running during the summer season.

3. No slot agreements

All maps and charts point to locations where vessels in service of a given operator berth. This may sometimes differ from commercial offers which involve subcontractors, yet we believe that drawing slot-based connections would create an image of exaggerated competition and artificially multiply lines to each and every port. This means that we exclusively feature operators that effectively sail their vessels to the presented ports.

4. Domestic traffic

Domestic connections are partly included in this publication, depending on their physical size (i.e. long distance covered at open sea, high turnover and/or transport performance) and importance for international traffic, incl. tourism.

introduction

Lost decade (partly) re-captured

by Marek Błuś

Alike the previous edition, this very Ro-ro and Ferry Atlas covers ro-pax and ro-ro services within Europe's surrounding seas, gathering in one place a powerful dataset on ship operators taking care of passengers and their cars, as well as of wheeled cargo. However, an inventory solely comprising maps, and a list of companies and their services' grids would be incomplete without a few words backed up by statistics-rich tables.

According to Eurostat, in 2015, a total of 464 mln tn of wheeled cargo was carried on-board ferries and ro-ros to and from the EU's main ports, an increase by 4.3% year-on-year against 2014's 445 mln tn. It was and wasn't a success in one go. Year 2015 brought for the first time a figure surpassing the pre-crisis 451 mln tn of 2007. On the other hand, six countries from the North and the Atlantic range, as well as four Mediterranean ones, still find themselves below their 2006-2008 volumes. Nevertheless, what might be considered as a freight recovery from the lost decade, at least taken en masse for the whole of Europe, this isn't unfortunately the case for the ferry passenger business. In 2014, as many as 394 mln travellers boarded a ship, around 10% fewer than in 2007-2008 (439 mln).

ACTEMIUM

Cold ironing
Shore connection in a box

With a many years' experience in building the world's largest shore connections, Actemium Sweden now offers a complete turnkey container solution.

We can set up the container for you at your site, after which you can simply connect it in any harbour in the world within about a week from delivery. Should your needs change, you just move your container. With cold ironing the ship's auxiliary engine can be turned off at shore, thereby reducing both noise and emissions.

Actemium Sweden has so far equipped seven harbours in Sweden and one in Norway with this innovative container solution. Will you be next?

- Less polution
- Less energy use
- Less noise
- More flexibility

Yet, the statistics could be further misleading without additional information on trends which differ in pax and cargo tables. For instance, freight volumes tend to drop sharply (as happened back in 2009 all the way down to 373 mln tn), growing since then, while figures for passenger traffic diminish rather slowly and evenly throughout the years. As such, for a multi-portfolio company which takes care of passengers, pax cars, and ro-ro cargo, a sudden change in its business proportion can have wide repercussions.

Although the European ferry market is strictly divided into North and South networks, each with its own peculiarities, market strengths and weaknesses, as well as dynamics, the across the board picture paints an image of weak intra-European trade of manufactured components and all consumption goods. The hypothesis that other types of shipping, like containers, have partly substituted the ro-ro mode is untenable, simply because the whole of Europe's short sea shipping made 1,811 mln tn in 2015 (to and from the EU's main ports), less by 51 mln tn than in 2007. In some regions, like the Baltic Sea, it is exactly the ferry and ro-ro market which nowadays has the upper hand over their box-shaped competitors. Anyway, trade has been falling for a long time, and despite the higher than in 2007-2008 level of consumption today, any overall rise depends on imports from outside the EU.

The fall in households' leisure and fun budgets could be named as the chief culprit for decreasing passenger traffic, and this especially holds true for the Med. Other factors have their pennyworth as well, such as price convergence between neighbouring economies which renders shopping trips obsolete.

One more note concerning our tables, where here and there you can see the remark "All-time high." This "all-time" might at first glance be misinforming, particularly when one can cast his or her mind back years on a given port's turnover, but all becomes clear when we underline that our comment pertains only to Eurostat's statistics dating

PORT SZCZECIN-ŚWINOUJŚCIE

World for Business. Business for World

Świnoujście's outer port unique potential

In December, 2015, the tanker Al Nuaman moored at the brand-new quay in Świnoujście's outer port, bringing the first 210 thou. m^3 gas shipment for cooling down and starting up the biggest LNG facility across the Baltic Sea region.

The Świnoujście LNG Terminal is the largest energy project in the history of Poland. By diversifying gas supplies, this strategic programme will have major economic as well as energy safety impacts on the national, but also regional and European levels.

Several companies and organizations have been deeply involved in carrying out the LNG project in north-west Poland. The Szczecin and Świnoujście Seaports Authority – with the support of EUR 25 mln from the European Energy Programme for Recovery – has built an unloading platform together with the safe mooring system for LNG carriers, set up a trestle, a technological and fire water platform, as well as dredged the unloading platform's basin to 14.5 m, and to 12.5 m along the remaining part of the jetty. As such, Q-Flex tankers up to 315 m long, 50 m wide, 12.5 m in draught, and carrying 120-216 thou. m^3 of LNG can smoothly call at the LNG Terminal in Świnoujście's outer port.

back to 2005. For an illustration, in the mid-1990s the throughput of the Puttgarden-Rødby pair amounted to over 7.0 mln tn/year apiece thanks to as-of-1997-discontinued rail ferry cargo traffic.
